Using a Digital Camera Use a digital camera to make images. A digital camera contains an electronic lens, a sensor, and a microprocessor to control everything. In theory, a digital camera should be able to record images just like a 35-millimeter film camera can, but in practice, most cameras have limitations that make them more useful for certain types of projects. The following list details what you can and can't do in a digital camera. A digital camera is an indispensable tool. The best digital cameras have a lot of options: a flash, a wide-angle lens, a zoom lens, and so on. But when a camera has too many options, as many as possible of those options may become unusable. Most camera lenses are fixed focal length lenses. A camera's lens is the part of the camera that focuses an image on the sensor. When you zoom in with your camera, you move closer to the object that you're trying to capture.

If the lens has a focal length of 10 mm, then the camera is really zooming in by narrowing the angle of the lens and thereby magnifying what's in front of it. On the other hand, if the lens focal length is 70 mm, then the camera is really moving farther away from the object you're trying to capture. As the lens focal length changes, so do the points of focus, which is the point on the sensor at which the camera focuses its image. With a 10 mm lens, the camera is focusing on a point between the lens and the sensor. With a 70 mm lens, it's focusing on a point between the 70 mm focal length and the sensor. At the short focal length of a camera, the points of focus lie very close to the camera lens. This setup is ideal for an image that you want to print on a 4 × 6 photo album or to scan into a computer and

Q: How to capture a global var inside a class in a singleton object? I have a javascript file "class1.js" which contains a singleton object (global variable) which has a function defined inside it. I want to define a function and capture "this" inside that function. I have this code: class HttpBase {} class FsKppBase extends HttpBase { constructor() { this.type = "fskpp"; console.log(this.type); } login() { console.log(this); } } /* Singleton object / fsKpp = new FsKppBase(); fsKpp.login(); However in the login() function the this gets captured as a reference to the function instead of the object. What is the correct way to capture the this inside the function? I have gone through some resources but haven't been able to find the solution to my problem. A: You don't need to pass this in order to access the scope of the object you pass in as a constructor argument. Here's a demonstration of how this.type is being accessed: class HttpBase {} class FsKppBase extends HttpBase { constructor() { this.type = "fskpp"; console.log(this.type); } } / Singleton object */ const fsKpp = new FsKppBase(); fsKpp.login(); function log(type) { const out = document.getElementById("out"); out.innerHTML = type + " " + this.type; } log("fsKpp.type"); Q: What are the differences between the various Star Trek screenwriters listed on Wikipedia? Wikipedia (with help from the internet) gives us a long list of the different Star Trek screenwriters: Adam Nimrada Brent Spiner Bruce on Star Trek II and III George Lucas George Martin
